The industrial units dotting the industrial map of Thiruvannamalai District are small and tiny industries. The industrial activities are in low profile activities such as flourmills, silk reeling and footloose industries. The concentration of such traditional units is centered around Thiruvannamalai, Polur and Arni. Considerable numbers of rice mill units are clustered in Cheyyar. Out of 6078 units concentrated in this district, 41 % are falling under the category of cottage and rural industries. Most of the units are based on local resources. Fruit, vegetable and floriculture are the major thrust sectors that are considered as sleeping giants in the district. Entire Chengam and Cheyyar regions have great potential for promoting agro-based industries. However, the existing potentiality has not been effectively exploited and can be attributed to poor entrepreneurship talent and initiative among the local youth.

The availability of rare herbs and medicinal plants in Jawadhu Hills and in Melchengam offers promotion of medicinal extraction units in a big way. The concentration of neem trees in Thiruvannamalai and adjoining district of Villupuram offers promotion of neem based industries in this district. By and large, the district is suitable for promotion of agro-based industries.

Arani has been one of the historical silk and cotton weaving centres in India. It is famous for its light weight and affordable handloom silks. Agriculture, bee keeping, poultry are the other major economic activities in the town. The town is also well known for its Paddy and Rice trade.

The construction of SIPCOT Complex is under way and it is hoped that it will attract huge investment opportunities in future

Dairy Development

Tamil Nadu Government sanctioned an additional Rs 11.51 Crore towards the construction of a milk powder unit in Thiruvannamalai district, being executed by the National Dairy Development Board. The state government has also sanctioned Rs 2.40 Crore for opening Veterinary Training and Research Centres in Thiruvannamalai, Krishnagiri and Villupuram districts
